Supporting telecom-specific openings by partnering with targeted groups (e.g., trade organizations) can help attract manual workers from outside of the telecom industry

Standardizing licensing requirements across states can enhance worker mobility, enabling adjacent-state workforce strategies; licensing compacts from other industries can serve as initial models

Next Steps

Eligible Entities can use their state workforce data to develop a plan that will prepare and maintain a robust telecommunications workforce.

- 1 Contact your State Broadband Office to assemble your workforce team to scope workforce-related project activities and develop workforce standards.
- 2 Review the report findings with your workforce team, focusing on the scale and types of shortages as well as top deficits by occupation.
- 3 Consult other telecommunications workforce data sources including the State Department of Labor in conjunction with the report findings to obtain as complete a picture as possible.
- 4 Use NTIA's Workforce Planning Guide to help integrate the report findings into your state's telecommunications workforce development plan.
- 5 Reach out to and partner with employers, unions, community partners, and local organizations focused on workforce to identify existing training programs and next steps to close the workforce deficit.

! Refer to Section 3 of the Workforce Planning Guide for additional guidance on how to assemble your workforce team and evaluate workforce shortages in your state.
